For purposes of this section, "objective and scientific manner," means the disposition or attitude toward the study of natural and observable phenomena, which attempts to conform the mind of an individual perceiver to the manifest and intelligible nature of the thing being perceived by:

- (1) Making a hypothesis based on an observed phenomenon;
- (2) Conducting experimentation corresponding to the hypothesis made; and
- (3) Drawing conclusions from the results of the experimentation to inform and refine or reform the hypotheses."
